Carlson, during his long sleep, did not exhibit any signs of paralysis, having free use of his limbs. The case attracted consider. able interest among medical men of the city and numbers of visitors called to see the modern Rip Van Winkle, Many measures were adopted to arouse the man from his slumber, one of which at least impressed itself very effectively upon his memory. He was given about forty-five drops of fluid extract of ipecac to cause nausea, in the hope that this would have the desired result, but, as before stated, it only served to make him remember its administration, as immediately upon awakening Thursday, Carlson said to the attending physician, when asked how he felt: "I feel all right; but, doctor, that was a terrible dose of medicine you gave me some time ago. He seems to remember almost every incident that has happened since he fell asleep, which fact tends to make the case all the more remarkable. ed at y inconvenience as a result of his long sleep, but it is thought he will again lapse into a somnambulistic state.

The case is a rather queer one and has excited a vast amount of interest .-Norfolk Landmark.
